DA's handling of Remy case to get independent review

Outside probe. A former DA and an assistant district attorney will conduct the review of the case.

An independent review will be conducted into the way the Middlesex District Attorney's Office handled the case of Jared Remy, who was released a day before he allegedly killed his girlfriend.

Middlesex District Attorney Marian Ryan announced the independent review on Wednesday, Aug. 21.

Remy, the son of Red Sox broadcaster Jerry Remy, is accused of fatally stabbing his girlfriend, Jennifer Martel, on Aug. 15.

The day before the stabbing, prosecutors agreed to release him on his own recognizance after he was arrested for assault and battery on Martel.

"The death of Jennifer Martel is a horrific tragedy, and it would be irresponsible for our office not to re-examine what happened," Ryan said in a statement.

Former Essex County District Attorney Kevin Burke and Norfolk County First Assistant District Attorney Jeanmarie Carroll will lead the independent review, which Ryan's office described as a "fact-finding assessment" that will also determine if the office's policies and procedures were followed and whether they are sufficient to "adequately address the offender release issues which arise in domestic violence cases."

"We will utilize these findings to make any changes necessary to better protect victims."
Ryan

Ryan has been defending herself in the wake of the murder. She said that her office made the decision not to seek bail after consulting with the arresting officer and Martel.

One state representative has called for her resignation amid the controversy.

"I am confident that District Attorney Burke and First Assistant Carroll will conduct a thorough and independent review of this case, and we will utilize these findings to make any changes necessary to better protect victims," Ryan said. "It is important to emphasize that while this review process continues, our focus remains on the prosecution of Jennifer Martel's killer, and our thoughts are with Jennifer's family."

Remy has a history of abusing women that goes back to 1998, when he was accused of assaulting a Weston woman, the Globe reported.

Remy pleaded not guilty to Martel's murder last week.

Bio clout

Mass. tops in biotech size

With top universities and research hospitals, international pharmaceutical firms and start-ups, the Bay State leads much of the nation in the size of its biotechnology and medical device industries, though on most fronts it is outpaced and outsized by California, according to a report issued Aug. 20.

Overall employment in the biopharma industry in Massachusetts stood at 56,462 in 2012, up 40 percent in 10 years, according to the Massachusetts Biotechnology Council report. Massachusetts leads the nation in the size of its biotech research and development sector and trails seven states in biopharma manufacturing. SHNS

Protesters condemn Manning sentence

Protesters gathered at Park Street Station on Aug. 21 to speak out against a 35-year prison sentence handed down to U.S. Army Pvt. Bradley Manning, and to demand a pardon from President Barack Obama. "It's time for all of us who have stood with (Manning) through the trial to show our support on this critical day," said organizer Matthew Krawitz, of Swampscott. "Whistle-blowing isn't a crime. It's in the public interest, and Bradley Manning is a hero."

Manning, 25, was found guilty on 20 criminal counts for leaking 700,000 classified files to WikiLeaks.

Lawsuit. Woman sues Pats after spouse's death

A Chicopee woman is suing the New England Patriots, the NFL and a security guard after her husband suffered an "agitation- and stress-" induced heart attack while at Gillette Stadium.

Kimberly Chartier filed the civil suit in Hampden Superior Court in late June on behalf of her son Tedy, who was at the 2010 game with her husband, according to The Republican. The wrongful death suit is seeking at least $10 million.

The suit said that Jeffrey Chartier suffered a heart attack after a confrontation with a security guard. MICHAEL NAUGHTON

Fire tears through South Boston church

A fire that broke out at a South Boston church Wednesday morning caused about $1 million in damage to the building. Fire crews responded to St. John the Baptist Church, an Albanian Orthodox church, at 410 West Broadway just after 9 a.m., according to the Boston Fire Department. The fire went up to five alarms, with heavy flames in the rear of the building. The blaze appeared to be centered in the rectory, which was connected to the rear of the church. Fire officials said the cause of the fire was not immediately clear. Six firefighters suffered injuries including smoke inhalation and neck pain. Two were burned and two others suffered cuts. All firefighters were ordered out of the building at one point. Because of the intensity of the fire, crews were only able to battle it from the outside. The fire department reported that at least part of the interior ceiling had collapsed. A collapse zone was set up around the building. / NICOLAUS CZARNECKI, METRO

Councilor wants pot banned from Boston parks

A Boston city councilor is aiming to ban marijuana smoking in parks and wants to increase the civil penalty for possessing small amounts of the drug.

Councilor Bill Linehan filed on Wednesday a proposed "ordinance regarding the public consumption of marijuana."

No pot in parks?
NICOLAUS CZARNECKI, METRO

Linehan, a councilor from South Boston, proposed to ban smoking marijuana in Boston Common or any other park or playground under the control or owned by the city. He said the proposal aims to target areas where he has received complaints from constituents and it does not include streets or other public areas.

"It's similar to how we manage alcohol consumption in public areas," he said. He's also seeking to allow police to issue a $300 citation for possessing marijuana. The current civil penalty is $100.

In 2008, state voters approved a ballot measure to decriminalize possession of less than 1 ounce of marijuana. Several communities have passed similar measures.

Kids need adults for UFC events

Violent sport. City councilors voted to ban kids under 16 from going to cage fights without an adult.

Citing the effect of violence on children, Boston City Councilors on Wednesday voted to ban anyone under 16 from attending live amateur and professional cage fighting matches in the city unless accompanied by an adult.

The amended resolution is a watered-down version of one introduced weeks ago that aimed to ban anyone under 18 from attending the fights. The revised resolution reflects a state law already on the books that prohibits kids 16 and under from attending matches without an adult.

The council deemed cage fighting, also known as "ultimate fighting" or "mixed martial arts," as an "extremely violent form of entertainment" performed by amateur and professional fighters bearing "Neo-Nazi messages in their tattoos or on their clothing."

The vote came just days after Fight Night 26 at the TD Garden drew an audience of 12,539 with gate receipts totaling $1.53 million.

Exposure to media violence causes a variety of physical and mental health problems for children and adolescents, according to experts, including aggressive and violent behavior, bullying, desensitization to violence, fear and depression.

The Ultimate Fighting Championship, which is the leading promoter of professional cage fighting events worldwide, did not immediately return a request for comment.

The UFC has not announced any plans to return to Boston.

MORGAN ROUSSEAU

Bad example

According to the resolution passed Wednesday, critics point to allegedly misogynistic and homophobic attitudes among UFC fighters.

- Critics claim UFC fighters have "joked about rape or used foul and abusive language that is particularly demeaning to women [and] have used homophobic slurs and other insults that are hurtful and offensive to the lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender community," the resolution states.

Clerk hurt chasing thief who stole Hasselhoff cutout

Hassled. Man stole two life-sized "Iced Hoffee" signs.

A Cumberland Farms clerk in Connecticut was critically injured Tuesday while trying to stop a man stealing two large David Hasselhoff signs that advertised the chain's "Iced Hoffee" coffee.

The clerk, 36, saw the thief put the signs, which were outside the store in Shelton, into an SUV at 1:15 a.m., police said.

In an attempt to stop the theft, the worker was struck and dragged by the SUV and landed on his head. As of Wednesday he was hospitalized and in critical condition at Bridgeport Hospital.

Shelton police said the getaway driver, 19, turned himself in.

The incident follows a rash of similar thefts across the region. Cumberland Farms officials say more than 500 Hasselhoff signs have been stolen from several New England stores in recent months.

Cumberland Farms did not return a request for comment.

Hasselhoff took to Twitter Wednesday to react to the incident: "I am shocked & truly saddened about the Cumberland farms store clerk tragedy. My heartfelt thoughts and prayers are with him and his family."

Mosquito bite

Norfolk County woman dies of EEE

A Norfolk County woman in her 80s contracted Eastern Equine Encephalitis and died after a few days of hospitalization in mid-August, becoming the first human victim of the mosquito-borne illness this year, health officials announced Tuesday.

The Department of Public Health announced it is seeking to determine where the woman was likely "exposed to infected mosquitoes."

The DPH did not release the woman's name or other identifying information. There were seven cases of the disease in 2012. SHNS

Skipping fare. Marathon bombing cited for dip in fare evasion citations

The Boston Marathon bombings and the weeks following the attack may account for a slight dip in fare evasion citations handed out in 2013, according to Transit Police.

Since January, MBTA officers issued roughly 2,800 tickets to people caught sneaking into the transit system without paying — a few hundred less than the same period in 2012.

"Part of what could be driving the drop is the two-week period after the Boston Marathon bombing," said Deputy Chief Robert Lenehan. "The additional Transit Police, National Guardsmen and [state] troopers in the system during that time may have been a deterrent."

More officials, less crime
NICOLAUS CZARNECKI, METRO

Serious crimes like homicide, rape, robbery, assault and burglary were down 21 percent in July 2013 compared to last July, Lenehan said.

Facebook leading project for world Internet access

Ad revenue. Facebook recently reported quarterly results exceeding expectations.

Facebook Inc.'s Chief Executive Mark Zuckerberg has enlisted Samsung Electronics Co. Ltd, Qualcomm Inc. and four other companies for a project aimed at bringing Internet access to people around the world who cannot afford it, following efforts by Google Inc.

The project, called Internet.org, is the latest move by an Internet company trying to expand Web access globally. Facebook rival Google is hoping technology, including balloons, wireless and fiber connections will expand connectivity.

Internet.org, which was launched on Wednesday, will focus on seeking ways to help the 5 billion people — or two-thirds of the world's population — who do not have Internet access to come online, the company said in a statement.

It added that so far, only 2.7 billion people around the world have Internet access.

The partnership's potential projects will include the development of lower-cost smartphones and the deployment of Internet access in underserved communities, as well as working on ways to reduce the amount of data downloads required to run Internet applications, according to Facebook. REUTERS

Report. Continental AG, Google work on building self-driving vehicles

German automotive parts maker Continental AG is close to securing alliances with Google and IBM to develop autonomous driving systems for cars, a German newspaper reported.

Daily Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung cited unspecified sources as saying Continental aims to unveil the two pacts at the Frankfurt Car Show in September.

Continental is already in an alliance with U.S. network equipment maker Cisco Systems to work on systems for automated and driverless automobiles and on data transfer between cars.

A Continental spokesman declined to comment. Spokespeople for Google and IBM in Germany were not immediately available for comment.

Google has been working on self-driving technology since 2010, including testing a fleet of self-driving cars along California roadways.

A raft of automakers including GM, Ford, Toyota and Volkswagen are developing computer-controlled features that help drivers avoid accidents. REUTERS

Family of man who kidnapped Calif. teen says he may be her father

The family of a man authorities say abducted a California girl after killing her mother and brother is claiming the kidnapper was the biological father of the two children, according to a news report.

James DiMaggio allegedly kidnapped Hannah Anderson, 16, and took her into the Idaho wilderness, where police rescued her after shooting and killing him earlier this month.

Family spokesman Andrew Spanswick told KGTV-TV in San Diego that they have requested DNA tests they believe will prove that DiMaggio, a close friend of the Anderson family, was the father of Hannah and her 8-year-old brother Ethan.

"We are requesting DNA samples from Hannah and anything they can get from Ethan," Spanswick told the TV station Tuesday. REUTERS

Gas 'kills hundreds' in Syria, UN Security Council convenes

Chemical weapons. Doctors described symptoms that they believe point to the use of sarin gas.

Syria's opposition accused government forces of gassing hundreds of people on Wednesday by firing rockets that released deadly fumes over rebel-held Damascus suburbs, killing men, women and children as they slept.

While U.N. Secretary General Ban Ki-moon expressed shock, immediate international action is likely to be limited, with the divisions among major powers that have crippled efforts to quell two-and-a- half years of civil war still much in evidence.

Russia hastened to back up denials from the administration of President Bashar al-Assad by saying it looked like a rebel "provocation" to discredit him.

Britain voiced the opposite view: "I hope this will wake up some who have supported the Assad regime to realize its murderous and barbaric nature," Foreign Secretary William Hague said on a visit to Paris, London's ally against Assad.

France, Britain, the United States and others called for an immediate on-site investigation by U.N. chemical weapons inspectors who arrived in the Syrian capital only this week. Moscow, urging an "objective" inquiry, said the very presence of that team suggested government forces were not to blame. REUTERS

Students and teachers at a Pakistani Islamic school designated as a "terrorist training center" by the United States furiously rebutted the charges Wednesday and said they had not had a chance to defend themselves against the accusations.

The sanctions include a ban on U.S. citizens having any dealings with individuals or assets linked to the school. The Pakistani Interior Ministry and army declined to comment on the decision. REUTERS

Lincoln Tech's Somerville Campus Celebrates Diversity While Supporting Homeless Coalition

WEST ORANGE, NJ – August 15, 2013 – On Tuesday, August 6th, the Somerville campus of Lincoln Technical Institute hosted a Diversity Fair to raise funds for the Somerville Homeless Coalition. The fair saw more than 300 visitors welcomed onto the campus while supporting a great cause – with great success!

"We were so pleased with the turnout for this event," says Kerrin Miniutti, Director of Admissions at the Somerville campus. "As a Lincoln school, we're always striving to find ways that we can give back to the community that's been so supportive of what we do. And the Somerville Homeless Coalition is such a deserving organization – everyone there is completely committed to helping those who need it the most. We were honored to be able to partner with them this year."

"In just a few short hours," Miniutti continues. "We raised well over 400 dollars for the Homeless Coalition and collected more than 50 canned and non-perishable food items for them as well. We had told our vendors that in lieu of a table charge, we were asking them to make a donation of canned goods—and the response was tremendous."

Nearly 30 vendors took part in the event, including Boston Children's Hospital, the Department of Homeland Security, the Department of Transitional Assistance, the American Red Cross, US Navy, US Army, CVS, Whole Foods Market, Massachusetts General Hospital, Pizzeria Regina, Catholic Charities, Texas Roadhouse, and many, many more. With such a broad mix of participants and industries represented, it was a great way to celebrate the diversity that resides in the Somerville community as well.

"This fair was a wonderful way of bringing together the businesses and residents that are such integral parts of life in Somerville," Miniutti says. "We think the results in support of our area's homeless show the kinds of things you can achieve when you have such a diverse mix of people all working together towards a common goal."

A complete list of vendors who attended, along with pictures of the event, can be found on the campus Facebook page at Facebook.com/LTISomerville.

The Somerville campus of Lincoln Technical Institute offers certificate programs in Information Technology fields, Health Sciences, and Criminal Justice. Lincoln's dedicated team of Career Services representatives assists successful graduates with job search training—including résumé development and interview skills—that begins even before completion of the program.

The campus is accredited by the Accrediting Council for Independent Colleges and schools, ACICS. ACICS is listed as a nationally recognized accrediting agency by the United States Department of Education.

WikiLeaks trial. Soldier Manning gets 35 years in prison for releasing intel

U.S. soldier Bradley Manning was sentenced on Wednesday to serve 35 years in a military prison for turning over more than 700,000 classified files to WikiLeaks in the biggest breach of secret data in the nation's history.

Judge Col. Denise Lind sentenced the 25-year-old former low-level intelligence analyst to less time behind bars than the 60 years military prosecutors had sought, and said Manning could be eligible for parole in about a decade, after serving one-third of his prison term.

Even that shorter prison term is seen as a strong deterrent to others who may consider exposing U.S. government secrets, according to experts and transparency advocates. REUTERS

WikiLeaks says jail term is still 'strategic victory'

WikiLeaks said a 35-year jail term handed down to Bradley Manning for leaking classified files was a "strategic victory" as it meant he was eligible for parole in less than a decade.

"Bradley Manning now eligible for release in less than 9 years, 4.4 in one calculation." WikiLeaks said on its official Twitter feed.

I'VE GOT A SECRET

With all the news about governments listening in on phone calls and plundering around in emails, you may have noticed a surge in stories about encryption. Privacy advocates believe using computers to encode our conversations may be the only way for people to escape the prying eyes and ears of Big Brother both here and abroad, and I must say I am delighted.

Ever since I was a kid, I've loved the idea of communicating in code. I can't imagine how many scraps of paper I filled with cryptic lines and stashed in secret locations for my James Bondish pals to find: "The mailman has the order and is sleeping in Guam." "Fishing is a great sport, but jugglers don't own watches." "Barbra is flying a kite, but Streisand is eating fried steak."

We tried numeric codes, drawings with lots of swoops and arrows, and variations on ancient Egyptian pictograms. Of course, none of us could ever figure out what the other guy meant, but we took that as proof that our codes were really excellent. After all, if we didn't know what we were saying, how could anyone else crack into our secret society?

Ancient Egyptian code

Years later, when my wife and I became parents, I descended into code-speak again. Whenever she wanted to chat about something that might agitate the kids, she would slip into some rudimentary French that she thought I might comprehend. Despite my four years of French 1 in high school, the results were mixed. She'd ask if I thought ice cream would be a nice treat for the toddlers and I'd stand there shouting out guesses like a maniac playing charades. "Camping? Horseshoes? You need to buy a carpet? You'd like some goat's milk?"

Still, I've never lost my love of this whole concept of secret messages and if that's the way we are going, I say "Cry havoc and let slip the dogs." Which, btw, is my secret code for, "Heck, half the time I don't understand what people are trying to say in emails anyway. Might as well make it official."

March to mark anniversary of MLK Jr.'s 'dream' speech

Tribute. The U.S. Postal Service will unveil a commemorative stamp on Aug. 23.

Marches, speeches and global bell-ringing are set to mark the 50th anniversary of the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr.'s "I have a dream" speech, a key event in the struggle of African Americans for racial equality.

The week of commemorations in Washington will culminate on Aug. 28, when President Barack Obama, the first black U.S. president, will speak at the Lincoln Memorial 50 years to the day after King made his historic address at the site.

King, an advocate of nonviolence, was among six organizers of the 1963 March on Washington, a rally for jobs and freedom.

The March on Washington helped pressure Congress to pass the landmark Civil Rights and Voting Rights acts in 1964 and 1965, respectively. The Supreme Court struck down a key provision of the Voting Rights Act in June, and Obama has called that ruling a setback.

Events in Washington kicked off on Aug. 21 with a commemorative service at Mount Airy Baptist Church. Seminars on women and young people in the civil rights movement and on March on Washington figures Bayard Rustin and A. Philip Randolph will take place in the following days. REUTERS

Fort Hood defendant rests case without witnesses

The U.S. Army psychiatrist accused of killing 13 fellow soldiers and wounding 31 others in a rampage at Foot Hood, Texas, in 2009 rested his defense case in his court-martial on Wednesday, Aug. 21, without calling any witnesses.

Maj. Nidal Hasan, acting as his own defense attorney, has remained largely passive in court since telling the jury in opening arguments, "The evidence will clearly show that I am the shooter."

Military judge Col. Tara Osborn set closing arguments for Aug. 22. REUTERS

Twitter fear

The Wright approach

Edgar Wright, the director of "The World's End," is a big fan of social media, using his active Twitter account for both promotion and communicating with fans and friends alike. But when it comes time to make a movie, he clams up. "I actually feel superstitious talking about future projects, which is why during 'World's End' I actually went off Twitter for the entire production. And I'll probably do it again on the next film," he explains. "People want so much information and there are so many websites and everybody wants to do updates every hour all day, I think sometimes it's nice to just have less information out there. Because you don't want people to be sick of it before the film comes out, you know?"

Not-so-simple Simon

Interview. The star and co-writer of "The World's End" talks playing a jerk and throwing off expectations.

Simon Pegg reunites with Edgar Wright and Nick Frost for "The World's End." / GETTY IMAGES

For the finale in director Edgar Wright's so-called "Cornetto Trilogy" — following "Shaun of the Dead" and "Hot Fuzz" — actor and co-writer Simon Pegg wanted to play something other than the nice guy. Enter the loudmouthed, stuck-in-the-past Gary King (Pegg), who reunites his reluctant high school chums for a night of binge drinking and nostalgia in "The World's End." While Gary is very much the hero of the film, he's not exactly likable, and that's entirely by design, according to Pegg.

See more at www.metro.us

"Selfishly, I wanted to be the overtly comic one in this," Pegg says. "And I wanted to make Gary as maddening and irritating and difficult to like as possible because I knew ultimately there was an excuse for it. And also, it's just a lot of fun to be such a dick. As an actor, it's a gift."

Pegg's Gary was very much the top dog in high school, leading around his pals (played as adults by Nick Frost, Martin Freeman, Paddy Considine and Eddie Marsan) with little regard for how his future might play out. "I knew guys like that who were the absolute most popular boy. They were the best-looking, they were in a band, they were the lead singer of that band, they got all the girls and then they never quite moved on past that," Pegg says. "That glory was so intense that anything that came subsequently was unfulfilling and that ate away at them, so that they started to live in the past and then eventually just became shadows of who they were in every way, all their potential lost. And it's really sad. I wanted Gary to be at once maddening and lovable and dickish."

Quite a tall order for the protagonist of a film. But then Pegg and Wright, as much as they revel in genre conventions in their comedies, are always looking to subvert mainstream expectations. That includes — not to give too much away — the ending of "The World's End," something Pegg sees as an antidote to the barrage of Hollywood endings. "I think the re-establishment of the status quo is a device which might anesthetize audiences a bit, might make them feel a bit nice when they leave the theater, but ultimately it makes you forget the film," he says.

"When we go to the movies often, we see normality and then we see it disrupted, then we see it return to normal and that's why we leave kind of thinking, 'Oh, that was nice,'" he says. "When in actual fact, sometimes it's good to upset the status quo completely and leave it undone. I think it's more challenging to an audience to not give them necessarily what their comfort zone wants."

A convinced consumer

The Comic-Con complex

A longtime comics fan, Pegg feels right at home at San Diego Comic-Con, where he and Edgar Wright brought "The World's End" for an early U.S. unveiling. But given how much the pop culture it celebrates has come to dominate the entertainment industry, Pegg admits he's a bit worried.

"I read an essay on America by Jean Baudrillard when I was at university and it was all about the infantilization of society and about how we are kept young by being fed ... arguably juvenile stuff," he says. "It keeps us young because it keeps us in touch with our childhood, makes us more pliable, makes us a bit easier to control. It was all about the way that it suits the dominant ideology, late capitalism, to keep us in a state of arrested development because it makes us easier to convince to be consumers and stuff. And here we are."

LILY COLLINS

The daughter of Phil Collins does young adult drama in "Mortal Instruments."

TAKE A LOOK AT HER NOW

Lily Collins is bracing herself for the long haul with "Mortal Instruments: City of Bones," the first in what's hoped to be a franchise of films based on the successful book series looking to capture some of that "Twilight" and "The Hunger Games" magic. With the second film already green-lit — and going into production in September — Collins, daughter to hit-maker Phil, likes to think she knows what she's in for.

What sort of mental preparation do you have to do before signing up for a franchise like this?
You have to really love the story. I was a fan of the books before I was cast, and I just think the story gets better and better. There are so many things in our movie that are introduced in the first book that get addressed in the movie that get cleared up or explained later that you really want the chance to, because it could leave you at a major cliff-hanger and unresolved.

How do you approach the idea of spoilers when the film is based on a popular book series?
It's so weird; I don't know what I can say and what I can't say. It's in a book, and it's online. But then everyone's saying, "Don't remind them." I don't want to actively ruin the story for you. If you really wanted to know, you could totally find out, but I'm not going to be that person.

You don't get that with a movie made from an original screenplay.
No, you don't. Then you have to sign those confidentiality agreements, and that's when it's like the forbidden fruit. When you're not supposed to say something, that's when you really, really want to say it. And then you just blurt it out without even knowing it.

NED EHRBAR
ned.ehrbar@metro.lu

Bonus question

How much do you pay attention to online fan discussions?
I think originally when I was cast, I didn't quite understand the scope of the films or the books, and then all of a sudden all of these websites blasted up, and Twitter and Facebook and everything, and I was like, "Oh, it's actually really big." For every positive comment you find, you'll find five bad ones, so I really try to separate myself. It's exciting when people come up who are excited about things, and that kind of gives me the extra drive to get through a long shooting day. But I think actively trying to find that stuff will only end up bringing you negativity as well. It's just not worth it. Already the articles aren't great, and the comments just bring you down even further.

Horror. Delightful home invasion is the 'Next' indie crossover

Review

'You're Next'

Director: Adam Wingard

Stars: Sharni Vinson, AJ Bowen

Rating: R

The indie horror scene has so far been content to stay indie, with DIY filmmakers cutting their teeth on cheapie anthology films to scare up a couple bucks on VOD.

"You're Next," from established director Adam Wingard and screenwriter Simon Barrett, has the feel of coming from filmmakers who have honed their chops. Among its expendable cast are horror filmmaker Ti West and Joe Swanberg, and it's poised as operating somewhere between the two: low-rent retro horror with a mumblecore streak.

It's an old-fashioned home invasion thriller, where a gathering of a well-off family takes place in the kind of enormous, rural manse that attracts scary intruders with white fox masks. After baddies pepper a dinner with crossbow shots, mom cowers and dad bugs out. But the son's girlfriend (Sharni Vinson) proves capable of gorily felling villains.

The tone, comic yet horrific, gains a lot from the indie aesthetics. Wingard and Barrett know how to plant booby traps, then wait long enough for the viewers to nearly forget them — with nice payoff. By the end they appear to be going for a kind of amusingly cynical worldview — but they know better. More specifically, they know they want a tidy crossover hit. MATT PRIGGE

You can go home again

End times comedy. "The Cornetto Trilogy" climaxes with a very British bang.

Simon Pegg tries to thwart the apocalypse in "The World's End." / LAURIE SPARHAM, FOCUS FEATURES

Review

'The World's End'

Director: Edgar Wright

Stars: Simon Pegg, Nick Frost

Rating: R

The cast and makers of apocalypse comedy "The World's End" are a good decade older than the cast and makers of apocalypse comedy "This is the End." That makes all the difference. Where the latter was essentially a string of (often inventive, often hilarious) non sequiturs and inside jokes about the clan spawned by Judd Apatow, the former is rooted in a middle-aged sense of disappointment and failure. Director Edgar Wright and actors/writers Simon Pegg and Nick Frost may be of the generation still in thrall to "Star Wars." But they are as aware of the problems with stunted adolescence as they are an embodiment of it.

Indeed, the entire setup for their third film — in the so-called "Cornetto Trilogy" that includes "Shaun of the Dead" and "Hot Fuzz," so named because of a brand of ice cream snacks in each — is about recreating the happy past. In 1990, five high schoolers attempted — and happily failed — a 12-pub pub crawl in their remote hometown. They've all grown up to varying degrees of success — except for Gary King (Pegg), who still dresses in a trench coat and Sisters of Mercy T-shirt, still rocks a mixtape that includes Suede and Soup Dragons and still wants to give the crawl another go. You can go home again — as long as you can guilt-trip your reluctant mates (Frost, Martin Freeman, Eddie Marsan and Paddy Considine).

There's a mid-film twist that ought not to be spoiled, although it's something vaguely involving the film's title. The shift from insightful study of Peter Pan syndrome to genre thrills isn't as smoothly integrated as it was in "Shaun of the Dead." Instead of a major world event that relates to the characters' issues, everyone just goes "Drunken Master," knocking back even more pints while storming into battle. It's plenty of fun — right down to a genuinely novel capper — but to what end?

On the other hand, "The World's End" doesn't have the third act tonal collapse that slightly marred "Shaun." Wright and Pegg, who once again wrote the script, remain expert genre twisters, as well as underrated wordsmiths. As with the rest of their work, many of the best jokes are verbal, as when Gary talks about getting the band back together — but not the actual band they evidently once had. Even as their film gets delightfully away from them, "The World's End" makes a case for its makers, at least, and a case for staying somewhat emotionally stunted.

Casey Affleck cradles Rooney Mara in the neo-Western "Ain't Them Bodies Saints." / STEVE DIETL

Ain't the title awful?

Artsy Western. "Ain't Them Bodies Saints" chops up a fantastic oater into incoherence.

Review

'Ain't Them Bodies Saints'

Director: David Lowery

Stars: Casey Affleck, Rooney Mara

Rating: R

Terrence Malick was an established master even before he even got around to his third movie. But he has curiously few copycats. For awhile, his only major protege was David Gordon Green, whose "George Washington" and "All the Real Girls" made like Malick and mixed lyrical montages with off-hand voiceovers. Now, there's David Lowery, who has applied the "Badlands" aesthetic to a script with which it doesn't quite fit.

For Lowery it's a form of self-abuse: He's the one who wrote the script he wrecked as a director. Casey Affleck plays Bob Muldoon, an outlaw who takes the fall for his girl, Ruth (Rooney Mara), who critically wounded an officer, Patrick (Ben Foster), during a shootout. Ruth remains free, giving birth to their child — and even starting a hesitant almost-relationship with Patrick. But Bob's love cannot be bound, and he escapes to reclaim what's his.

Somewhere on a series of external hard drives lies the footage for a terrific, beautifully acted neo-Western, where hard, grizzled truths sit side by side with a portrait of passion running right into cold reality. These are swallowed in the presentation, which keeps lathering up a montage-heavy storm. The film never calms down: It's all broad strokes and pomp, with a score that keeps insisting what we see is a larger-than-life murder ballad. Complex characters are easily reduced to types: The Outlaw who wanted His Girl but had to go through The Cop.

The casualties are the actors. Keith Carradine has never been better, weathered and rueful as a mysterious associate of Bob's who feels compelled to look after Ruth. But his work is cut to ribbons. In some cases, such a clash between material and direction would produce fascinating results (as in Malick films, in fact). But here, the script and actors seem to be doing something far more revelatory than the man directing them.

REALITY

'Pregnant Behind Bars'

It seems there is no end to the different shows about wackadoo preggo women that the reality TV machine can churn out. And — from knocked-up teens to grown-ass women who somehow didn't realize they were knocked up until the baby was practically crowning — we watch them all. So it seems safe to say that we'll be checking out the premiere of this new show about women who are knocked up in prison. SERIES PREMIERE, THURSDAY, 10 P.M., DFH

Kylie Jenner gave out $1,000 gift bags

What is worse than a bunch of super wealthy, entitled teenagers going to a million-dollar Sweet 16 party? Those same teenagers getting a $1,000 gift bag at the end of it.

After Kylie Jenner's Sweet 16 party in Los Angeles this Saturday, the 150 guests were treated to a luxury goodie bag stuffed with 808 headphones, iPod speakers, Kardashian brand makeup, gift cards and other things made in China, reports TMZ.com. And just when you think it can't get any worse, it does: The items in the bag were probably free, given to the Kardashian empire as a way to get publicity. Is it the weekend yet?

Brandy performs to an empty stadium

Poor Brandy.

The singer performed to an empty, 90,000-capacity stadium last weekend in Johannesburg, South Africa, as part of the Mandela Sports & Culture Day. Due to poor publicity and marketing, the crowd left after the football and rugby matches, not realizing — or maybe they did? — that Brandy was set to perform. Per the tweet of @Kabomo, a South African musician, "Brandy performed to an empty stadium. With the stadium lights on. She sulked after two songs and walked off." Which, you know, is more than I would have done. I would have looked out and hightailed it to a bar where I would then sit for the next 30 years of my life and think about how it all went wrong.

Lohan and Oprah fail to bring in the ratings

Despite all the buzz and build-up, Lindsay Lohan's sit-down with Oprah Winfrey failed to produce much in the way of ratings. The one-hour special averaged 892,000 viewers during its premiere, with an average of 504,000 viewers tuning in for the encore broadcast that immediately followed.

By contrast, Winfrey's interview with Lance Armstrong in January pulled in 4.3 million viewers, breaking records for her OWN network.

Maybe that's because we just don't care that much anymore? It seems like we've known Lohan longer messed up than when she was sober. It's the new normal.

Can you spot the plankton in L'Espalier's halibut dish? / L'ESPALIER

An itty bitty ingredient is all over this summer's menus

Hot ingredient. Plankton is the delicious oceanic ingredient you didn't know you were eating.

New England's culinary scene is defined by seafood, particularly in the summertime. Soft-shell crabs, lobster rolls, succulent oysters and clams — our proximity to the shore affords us a host of delicious oceanic offerings. Diners eager to really make the most of the ocean, however, should start at the very bottom of the food chain: with phytoplankton.

Invisible to the naked eye but appearing as a green mass in large numbers, these little dudes are rich in omega-3s and provide a hit of light salinity and grassiness to the dishes they grace on land. They come in a powder form, so they're best either freshly hydrated and used as a garnish (found on the hickory-smoked Beau Soleil oyster at Bistro du Midi as a velvety, sensual complement to the bivalve) or folded into a pasta dough or foam. Though they've been hiding on the menus of discerning chefs for a long while now (think Tony Maws' plankton conchiglie pasta at Craigie On Main), plankton and their deep-sea fellows are making a particularly strong showing this season.

"I'm sure you'll see it on more and more menus as the word gets out," L'Espalier chef de cuisine Matthew Delisle says, noting that the high price tag — about $350 for almost 9 ounces — is usually enough to deter much experimentation. "Not many chefs are willing to put that type of money into non-protein items."

Plankton can be found as a fumet on one of Delisle's current dishes, and he has plans to work it into a crab-and-cucumber concoction later this month. Using it, he adds, is just one more way to incorporate "everything ocean," like seaweed, into his dishes.

"It's one of those products that we have in abundance in New England, but ... people are not using much of it. ... These ingredients will make a surge since we are now, slowly, getting over pork," he says.

Marchesa lets its hair down

Style. The luxe brand launches a contemporary line of boho separates.

Craig and Chapman hit the preview. DAVID X. PRUTTING, BFA

Think of Marchesa and instantly visions of celebrities in stunning beaded and sculpted gowns walking the red carpet come to mind. It's a brand known for its glamorous ensembles fitting for the Oscars or $1,000-a-plate galas, not so much for parties at your friend's loft — that is, until now.

Last week, cofounders Georgina Chapman and Keren Craig debuted Marchesa Voyage — a new diffusion line of printed dresses, slouchy lounge pants and flowy blouses that range in price from $260 to $1,000.

"It's really about taking the essence of Marchesa with more relaxed easy pieces," Craig says at a preview for the new collection at the Gramercy Park Hotel.

"It's about a global-minded woman, whether she's traveling on a plane to an exotic place or whether she is just going to the office."

"Voyage is something Keren and I always wanted to do since the birth of Marchesa," adds Chapman. "We've always seen it as this lifestyle brand."

Mostly done by hand in the Marchesa studio, the patterns and embellishments — paisley and animal prints, gold embroidery, panels of lace — give the collection a luxe bohemian vibe.

So who's the hippie between the two?

"I think we both are," laughs Chapman, who says the duo were traveling in India when they dreamed up Marchesa. "We're very drawn to that sort of eclectic inspiration. Everything you see in the Voyage line encapsulates what we want to wear during the days."

And that can be anything, either "relaxed trousers and a top," Craig says, or "a dress like Georgina is wearing," she adds, pointing out the black shift with sparkling sequins on Chapman: "Maybe you want to go dancing in the evening and you don't have time to change."

A packed day ending with a night of bubbly: sounds about right for us.

HUEY LEWIS

Huey Lewis and the News revisit the album that proved the "Heart of Rock 'N Roll" was still beating 30 years ago, but is it still beating today?

GOOD 'SPORTS'

Old News, the band as they appeared 30 years ago. To read more with Lewis, including his thoughts on "American Psycho," and his Funny or Die parody of the film version, visit us online. / CHRIS WALTER\, WIREIMAGE

When Huey Lewis agreed to call Metro at 8 a.m. yesterday, we couldn't help but imagine the 63-year-old singer sticking his face in a sink full of ice to wake up, like in his iconic video for "I Want a New Drug." A lot has changed since then. For one, he doesn't do the ice routine. "I pinched that off of Paul Newman in 'Harper,'" says Lewis. "I don't recommend it. It's shockingly cold!" But a lot has stayed the same, as he is taking his backing band, The News, on a tour celebrating the 30th anniversary of the album that included that hit, "Sports." As part of the celebration, Lewis promises, "If you were born in '83, which is when the album came out, you get in free!"

It's been 30 years. How has it been to revisit all of these songs and play them in order?
It's fun. It's also interesting revisiting the period. There were no cell phones, no Internet, no jam bands, no personal computers, no CDs. The world was a completely different place. In our world, it was still audio-driven, until the mid-'80s. MTV even, they were only playing the radio hits. ... This was our third album. The first one stiffed up, the second one broke even, this was our third record and we produced it ourselves, because we wanted to have everything be on our own terms. So we aimed a bunch of these tracks right at radio. And now when I listen back to it and contemplate it, I realize that "Sports" was a record of its time in that it was a collection of singles. ... I think all of our subsequent albums flow much better, but everybody used to ask why we called the album "Sports," and it was kind of funny and paradoxical, but now I realize we called the album, "Sports," because shouldn't an album called "Sports" have a lot of hits?

Ahhhhh. Ha ha.
[Mocking] Ahhhhh. Ha ha.

You say that you were definitely aiming this music right at radio and making a concerted effort. Did you go as far as to hire a stylist? The colorful suit with the T-shirt and Ray Ban sunglasses was a pretty iconic look.
I'd been in England when I was with Clover [Lewis' previous band] and we supported Thin Lizzy. And [Lizzy singer] Philip Lynott took me under his wing, man. And he dressed me out of his closet a few times and gave me a sense of all this stuff that I had never had before. And I dressed the boys a little bit. We had it articulated, sort of. One guy was a Western kind of thing, and we were very much an American band, so we expressed those elements with our wardrobe.

You had the advantage of being a little older than a lot of the other pop stars of your era. Michael Jackson, Madonna and Prince were all in their 20s. You were in your 30s when the album came out. You seem to have been a little bit more level-headed.
Not that we didn't experiment! But we weren't spring chickens. I had seen it before, with Lizzy and all of these bands, and I recognized what was happening to us. This was our time. We even had a little band meeting and said, "Let's enjoy this. It doesn't get any better than this." You only go from obscurity to No. 1 once! And from that moment on, what is there?

I have a copy of the single for "I Want a New Drug" and it says on the sleeve "I Want a New Drug (Called Love)." What the hell is that?
Isn't that great? They were so worried about the single. They didn't want to release it and I said, "There's your f—ing single!" But we played that song in Roseland in New York and it went over great, but the record company guys were like, "We've got to add 'Called Love.'" Isn't that great?

ONE BOURBON, ONE SCOTCH, ONE BEER

Coolidge Corner has long been one of Boston's more unique neighborhoods. So unique, in fact, that it mostly ignored that whole "bar scene" trend that a lot of people seem to be into. For a long while, the bro-y Coolidge Corner Clubhouse (your standard Boston sports bar) constituted what passed for a bar scene, at all.

This has changed for the better in recent years, although not as much as residents might like. One worthwhile addition, however, is celebrating its first anniversary this month. That's a call for a whiskey and a beer. Many dozens, actually — which you'll find at Hops N Scotch.

See more at www.metro.us

As you might surmise from the name, the focus of the bar side of the operation here is on beer (40 taps and 45 bottles on the menu) and whiskey (about 140 varieties on offer).

The space reflects both sides of that coin as well, with a quieter dining room buffeted by a lively bar. It's a cross between a collegiate beer bar and the sort of dark, mature space in which one might imagine drinking scotch. Given its proximity to so many nearby colleges, the crowd can lean toward the younger side — particularly on weekends — but not necessarily in an off-putting way.

Bar manager Adrienne Griffith says they've developed a strong following for their beer cultivation, with regulars keeping abreast of what's new on tap and in bottle through their social media presence.

"People are really geeky with the beers," she says. "It's fantastic, the funkier the better." Among her recent favorites is the Jack's Abby 2nd Anniversary, a super hoppy, bitter Double IPL. For guests who can't decide, Hops N Scotch offers flights of both beers and whiskeys — the latter option is particularly economical.

Cocktails focus on whiskey, as well as the standard bitters and herbaceous liqueurs, although Griffith tries to make the menu approachable for drinkers of all types of spirits, she says. The best include the Whiskey Icarus, made with Four Roses bourbon, Fernet Branca, tamarind simple syrup and lime juice.

The cocktails, like everything else here, are on the affordable side (most are $10). That affordability includes much of the whiskey list. One line Griffith recommends is from Compass Box Whisky, artisan scotch-makers who experiment with unique ways to age whiskeys, transferring them from different styles of barrels, and so on, during the aging process.

It's all about "getting people to try more fun stuff," she says.

Horoscope

♌ Leo | July 23-Aug. 22.
Home improvements will turn out well and bring you greater prestige. Your discipline will pay off. A change of heart will be apparent in another.

♍ Virgo | Aug. 23-Sept. 22.
A partnership with someone who shares your interests and goals will be quite effective. You'll come up with a way to solve problems.

♎ Libra | Sept. 23-Oct. 22.
Your restlessness will promote change in your life and those around you. Getting together with people who share your interests will inspire you.

♏ Scorpio | Oct. 23-Nov. 21.
A lesson that leads to a positive change will give you the discipline you require to take on a project that has stymied you in the past.

♐ Sagittarius | Nov. 22-Dec. 21.
Open-mindedness on your part will spur conversations that can improve your career. A lifestyle change that will better your health, emotions or finances looks to be a win-win.

♑ Capricorn | Dec. 22-Jan 20.
Who you know will make a difference in how you get ahead. Discipline will pay off, but reputation and popularity will be what really count. Socialize with colleagues and make yourself approachable to everyone.

♒ Aquarius | Jan. 21-Feb 18.
Consider all your options and make a detailed plan based on sound reasoning. Educational pursuits may seem daunting, but doors will open for you if you pick up additional skills.

♓ Pisces | Feb. 19-March 20.
Your intuition is pushing you to act, and it's correct. Don't waste time on second thoughts or hesitation. Engage with your community.

♈ Aries | March 21-April 20.
Take care of any legal, domestic or business matters that arise and you will avoid complaints that could hinder your chance to relax.

♉ Taurus | April 21-May 21.
Sign up for an event that will expand your knowledge or raise your profile. Make an effort to nurture important relationships. Include loved ones in your plans.

♊ Gemini | May 22-June 20.
Confusion will set in due to the mixed signals you are getting from a co-worker. Ask questions and you can avoid giving or getting the wrong impression. Honesty is required.

♋ Cancer | June 21-July 22.
Your unusual way of seeing things and expressing yourself will capture an important someone's attention. This new relationship will lead to fabulous opportunities. BERNICE BEDE OSOL

Dreams come with cut apron strings

Re: '"Dreams" a nightmare for parents' (Metro, Aug. 21) When you spent money on your child's college degree, did you specifically agree to anything in return? If not, then he does not owe you his future. While I agree that it is important to have a Plan B, your child should live his life doing what makes him happy; he has the right to his own destiny. If his pursuits fail, he can deal with the results himself. You should make it clear that he is responsible for his own life. When you decided to have children, you accepted the responsibility that comes with it.

Any "sacrificing" you did was your own choice and not something your child needs to pay for. Or do you want your child to accept a job that he doesn't enjoy so that you will have the appearance of having a successful child?

Don't diagnose with newsprint

Re: 'A look into the mind of Tsarnaev's fan girls' (Metro, Aug. 19) Dr. Massicotte's assertion that people with borderline personality disorder (women in particular) would support an alleged terrorist as a symptom is a dangerous bias that deserves attention. One would assume a professional would steer away from naming a specific diagnosis. Has he spoken to any of these women to call into question their mental state? This disorder in particular has garnered a severely negative stereotype and his naming it as a potential reason for supporting Tsarnaev further adds to the one-sided opinion of a said, "deprived" individual. I ask as a reader, please utilize more responsible sources in the future.

Dodgers and Sox meet in regular season main event

Adrian Gonzalez is once again comfortable on the West Coast. / GETTY IMAGES

MLB. The Red Sox and Dodgers both have World Series aspirations a year after a monumental trade.

Never say that Bud Selig and his underlings lack a sense of humor. Selig's schedule-makers must have thought it would be cute to have Boston meet the Dodgers in Los Angeles exactly one year from the day the two storied clubs swung one of the more mind-boggling trades in baseball history.

More head-scratching than the Aug. 25, 2012, trade itself is where the Dodgers and Red Sox find themselves with just more than 30 games to go in the 2013 season. As of Aug. 21, the Sox had the most wins in the American League, with 74, and the Dodgers had 73 wins, tops in the NL West.

Could the three-game set this weekend at Chavez Ravine be a World Series preview? Perhaps, though both teams are far from traditional powerhouses. Los Angeles had a record of 30-42 on June 21, and it looked as though Boston's salary dump 10 months earlier was the steal of the century. But then Don Mattingly's club just kept winning. And winning. And winning.

The Dodgers have gone a stunning 43-10 since June 21. They dropped two games in a row for the first time since that date just this past Sunday and Monday.

L.A. has completed this remarkable turnaround on the backs of rookie phenom Yasiel Puig (.352 batting average, 12 homers, 28 RBIs) and a couple of familiar faces. Adrian Gonzalez, whom Red Sox management admitted they did not want to trade in last year's deal, is once again comfortable on the West Coast, as evidenced by his having knocked in 77 runs this season. Carl Crawford has resurrected his career after two injury-plagued seasons on Yawkey Way. The outfielder is hitting .290 on the year and has already played in 77 games this season. Crawford played in just 30 games for the Sox last season.

Of course, Crawford has been the most outspoken about his time in Boston since the deal, telling USA Today back in April: "I don't think I smiled in two years."

The other big chip moved by the Red Sox last year was Josh Beckett (Nick Punto was also in the deal), but the former Sox ace underwent season-ending neck and shoulder surgery in May.

The only former Dodger involved in the trade likely to see action this weekend for the Sox will be relief pitcher Rubby De La Rosa, who has been serviceable out of the Boston pen in 2013, with a 4.76 ERA in five appearances.

LOOKING FOR BREAKOUTS IN CONTRACT YEARS

FANTASY

ADAM LEVITAN, LIVING THE FANTASY

METRO'S FANTASY GURU BREAKS IT ALL DOWN

NFL players are pros. Their job is to play football and how well they play determines how much they earn. Don't think for a nanosecond that contract years don't matter.

When a guy knows that he'll be hitting the open market after the season, everything changes due to extra motivation. They start eating better, working out harder and practicing longer. It often results in increased on-field production. Let's get to this year's candidates to break out and get paid:

Finley's time to shine. Fantasy owners have a really bad taste in their mouth over Jermichael Finley because he's burned us so many times. This time feels different. It's not Finley talking about how good he is, it's the coaches raving about his vastly improved work ethic, strength and focus. He ripped off a 4/78/0 line despite playing just three series in the second preseason game. With Greg Jennings gone, Donald Driver retired and Jordy Nelson (knee) banged up, Finley is going to be a featured receiver. We always knew he had Top-5 natural talent for a tight end.

Golden boy. A perfect storm is brewing for Golden Tate to have his best year in the NFL. Thanks to Percy Harvin's hip surgery and Sidney Rice's ongoing knee woes, Tate's Seattle's No. 1 target. He has reportedly turned the corner in terms of scheme comprehension, has been the unquestioned best player at Seahawks camp and is playing with a rising star quarterback (Russell Wilson).

Refreshing MJD. We already know that Maurice Jones-Drew cares about money. A lot. Last year, he staged an extended holdout that got him nothing except a season-ending injury. Now Jones-Drew is content to play out his deal, show he has plenty of juice left and then get paid handsomely by someone else. Since the Jaguars know he won't be with them in 2014, the coaches won't hesitate to run him into the ground. Expect 350 touches.

Maurice Jones-Drew could get 350 touches on the ground. / GETTY IMAGES

NFL news

The best player on the Raiders is LT Jared Veldheer. He's out indefinitely. Offensive coordinator Greg Olson admits this throws a wrench into his plans, especially in the run game. Darren McFadden has averaged 2.75 YPC this preseason after getting 3.33 last regular season.

MLB pickups

Keep these names in mind if you are looking to tweak your fantasy baseball roster this week:

- Brandon Belt, 1B, Giants: Maybe the light has flipped on for the youngster. He's hitting .379 with five homers in his last 19 games.
- Brandon Beachy, SP, Braves: His return from Tommy John is going well. He's allowed a total of five earned runs over his last 20 innings and picked up two wins.
- Khris Davis, OF, Brewers: Davis is picking up some of the slack left by Ryan Braun. He has six homers in his last 21 games.
